Center for Disability-Inclusive Community Development (CDICD)

The Center for Disability-Inclusive Community Development, managed by National Disability Institute, is working to build the awareness that people with disabilities are a part of all communities and the needs of disability community need to be a part of community development activities.

Disability-Inclusive Community Development

- Disability-inclusive community development is assuring that ALL are included in activities that promote the wellbeing of a community.
- This may include enhancing affordable housing, workforce development and building the financial knowledge of low and moderate income (LMI) individuals with and without disabilities.
- An inclusive community development approach assures that the wellbeing of all is the focus.

New Brief: Race, Ethnicity and Disability: The Financial Impact of Systemic Inequality and Intersectionality

Highlights

- Persons with disabilities who are Black, Indigenous or Latinx have higher poverty rates (36%, 34%, and 28% respectively) than persons with disabilities who are White (23%).
- Across all racial/ethnic groups, households with a disabled working-age householder have lower net worth, compared to households without disability ($14,180 versus $83,985). Households with householders who are Black and disabled have the lowest net worth ($1,282). Next are households with householders who are Latinx ($13,340).
- Across all racial/ethnic groups, a lower percentage of persons with disabilities saved for unexpected expenses, compared to persons without disability. Lower percentages of persons with disabilities who are also Black (29%) and Latinx (30%) saved for unexpected expenses, compared to those who have disabilities and are White (44%).

New Brief: The Extra Costs of Living with a Disability in the U.S. – Resetting the Policy Table

People with disabilities encounter a wide range of out-of-pocket expenses. These expenses can weigh heavily on household finances and increase the risk of poverty; adults with disabilities experience greater difficulty meeting monthly expenses, saving for the future and making ends meet.

National Disability Institute, in partnership with the Stony Brook University School of Social Welfare and the University of Tennessee College of Social Work, released “The Extra Costs of Living with a Disability in the U.S. — Resetting the Policy Table” to quantify these costs and explain their implications. The question remains, what can we, as a country, do to address this inequality?
