Identifying Disability Partners

The logo for the National Disability Institute (ndi) is located in the top right corner. It consists of the lowercase letters "ndi" in a white, sans-serif font, set against a dark blue square background. A thin white horizontal line is positioned below the square.

Identifying Disability Partners in Your Community

The disability community is a diverse community. There are organizations that support individuals with different types of disabilities; some focus on employment for persons with disabilities while others may focus on community living.

Bringing key stakeholders together can assist in the design and implementation of financial inclusion programs for persons with disabilities. These stakeholders can identify the needs of the disability community, gain buy-in, support program design, create opportunities for blending and braiding resources and help market the program to its target audience. If the local community has a Mayor's Office for Persons with Disabilities (MOPD) or an Americans with Disabilities (ADA) office, these offices can be key partners for collaboration and can provide guidance on disability partners to engage. If financial empowerment activities are currently taking place within a community, it is important to also include those partners as key stakeholders.

This quick reference guide will help you identify the groups in your area and provide a brief list of potential groups for engagement in the convening of key stakeholders.
